One of the original members of Desco's founding team, Neville is a very experienced electrical engineer with a particular expertise in IT. He performs a dual role within the practice, taking prime responsibility for planning, managing and procuring our IT requirements whilst retaining hands-on involvement in electrical design.

He has over 25 years experience in the industry, primarily in consulting engineering, although he also spent a period of time working in a contractor's design department. Neville has played a major role in the development of the practice's IT systems and procedures and continues to provide expert guidance within the practice and to external clients on the IT requirements for buildings.
